New Chef Brings Even More 'Aloha' to The Cal and Main Street Station

Growing up, Chef Bradley Cruz' dad told him something that always stuck with him: "Always listen and never stop learning." It's turned him in to the chef he is today, and is just one of many reasons he's such a great fit as the new executive chef at The Cal and Main Street Station, demonstrating Boyd Style from day one.

Chef Bradley also brings with him a strong Hawaiian culinary tradition. He grew up in a family full of cooks and first obtained a love of cooking from his grandmother. Then, his step mother hired him as a dishwasher and prep cook at Nancy's Kitchen on Oahu, and he's been delivering deliciousness ever since, even working with some world-renowned chefs.

"The famous Roy Yamaguchi and Andreas Knapp," said Chef Bradley, when asked to name his greatest cooking influences. "After culinary school, I worked for both chefs. Chef Andreas gave me my cooking technique foundation and Chef Roy taught me passion for the business. I feel very fortunate to have worked for both chefs early in my career."

It's a passion he hopes to put to effective use and to pass on in the kitchens while working with other talented team members. "I like to manage by example. Understanding and experiencing everyone's job helps you make the correct decisions to move forward."

Chef Bradley's background and experience has culminated in a culinary philosophy perfectly suited to catering to all our guests, especially our Hawaiian guests. When asked what the markers are for success with Boyd Gaming's Hawaiian cuisine, Chef Bradley was quick to answer.

"Consistency. It must taste good now, next week, next year, etc. Familiar tastes bring the culture of the islands to the mainland. Signature dishes are very positive. When you're known for a signature dish, guests will always come back for it. For example, the Cal's oxtail soup has it down pat."

While he's new to the kitchens at The California and Main Street Station, he is not afraid to jump out of the frying pan and in to the fire. "I once had a chance to act as the night casino manager at a sister property," said Chef Bradley, clearly not relishing the thought. "It was a Saturday night. Every decision I had to make was not expected and challenging, from security issues to VIP requests. It was very rewarding in that I was rewarded with only having to do it for one night."

We are proud to welcome Chef Bradley and his team player attitude to the Boyd Gaming kitchens, and look forward to all the great dishes he'll be serving up to our guest for years to come.

Welcome, Chef Bradley!
